Should Genre Be Taught Academically?
Heather Osborne (M), Bart Beaty, Paula Johanson

Should courses on mystery, romance, SF&F, or children's literature be taught at the university level? And if so, how? Are they useful to a writer? Does academic study lead to better writing? What kinds of academic courses on genre are available? Have they been well-taught before? What are teachers' successful strategies?

Friday 1 PM - Suite 537
New and Hot Romances
Justyn Perry (Breathless Press) (M)

Enthusiasts discuss current and upcoming books.

Friday 2 PM - Foothills 2

Friday 3 PM - Suite 536
Morality and Politics in Genre Fiction
Hayden Trenholm
Every genre writer deals with moral issues: crime and justice, the ethics of scientific progress, the nature of love. How do you take a moral stance without seeming preachy? How do you explore politics -- in the broad sense of the social arrangements we create so we can live together -- without being ham-handed? Are writers who claim to be morally neutral simply reflecting the status quo or is it possible to be amoral and apolitical in writing?

Friday 3 PM - Suite 537
Building Enduring Characters: Playing in the Victorian Sandbox
Charles Prepolec, Jeff Campbell
Using the current popularity of Sherlock Holmes as a prime example, this panel will broadly discuss and explore elements in character building that have contributed to the enduring popularity of 19th century literary characters into the present day, with sidelights on pop culture media adaptations and working with licensed or public domain characters in new fiction.

Friday 4 PM - Foothills 2
Mastering Point of View
Robert J Sawyer
Learn the strengths and weakness of first-person and third-person narration, and how to avoid point-of-view pitfalls. Most beginning writers have a hard time choosing the appropriate point of view for their stories—and an even harder time sticking to it. Printed fiction can be more powerful than film, TV, or stage plays because it allows us to get inside the head of our viewpoint character—to actually become someone in the story. But a poor choice of point-of-view character can leave the reader uninvolved, and violations of the limited perspective provided by a specific point of view can rip the reader right out of the story.

Friday 4 PM - Suite 536
Self-Publishing Made Easier?
Derek Donais (M), Krista Ball, Aviva Bell
It is easier than ever today to be your own publisher both in print and eBook format and many authors, even established ones, are considering this path. The pros and cons are anything but clear. Authors who have investigated this path and followed it or turned it down discuss their findings.

Friday 4 PM - Suite 537
Critical Thinking
Neil Godbout, Hayden Trenholm
With independent reading on the decline, so too is critical thinking among today's youth, a conclusion borne out by declining high school and university achievement. What role do good books play in enticing youth to think for themselves? Do authors, especially YA authors, consciously plot their stories to stir up docile minds? What books can be recommended to get readers thinking?
Friday 5 PM - Foothills 2
Beyond The Bedroom - There's More to Romance Than Sex
ARWA: Billie Milholland, Sharon Wildwind, Sarah Kades, Jude Wilner
Whatever your genre, romantic relationships can be an integral component to your story and characters. Find out how to include romance in your writing, and not just smokin' hot sex.

Friday 5 PM - Suite 536
Are Creative Writing Programs Elephant Factories?
Heather Osborne (M), Sherry Peters
"Having a creative writer teach writing is like having an elephant teach biology". True or false? Do creative writing programs only produce creative writing teachers, not creative writers? Is it worth it to get an academic degree in creative writing?

Friday 5 PM - Suite 537
A Quick Comment About Flash Fiction
Rona Altrows (M), Kimberly Gould, Ron Friedman, Amber Hayward
Call it sudden fiction, microfiction, micro-story, short short, or postcard fiction, writers of <1000 word prose discuss the challenges and the appeal extreme brevity.

Saturday 10 AM - Brentwood
The Benefits and Drawbacks of Writing Quickly
Candice Robinson, Josiah Rose, Danni Menard, Tim Mitchell
Using NaNoWriMo as an example, does reaching "The End" as fast as possible really result in a sloppy product? Or does the fast pace of writing a novel in a month train writers to meet schedules set by agents and editors? Can the wild abandon of NaNoWriMo have a place in the serious world of publishing?
Saturday 10 AM - Charleswood

Everybody Has a Story: A Conversation About What a Fiction Writer Might Gain from A Poet
Bob Stallworthy (M), Micheline Maylor, Chase Baird, Elona Malterre
Poetry is poetry, fiction is fiction, isn’t it? How can these two genres meet? Where might they cross each other? Where might there be bridges between the two? What can a fiction writer possibly learn from a poet? This panel of poets and fiction writers, sometimes both in one person, will discuss, argue, look under, over and behind the writing of poetry and fiction to find places where the bridges might be, where the two genres come together or at least touch.

Saturday 1 PM - Charleswood

The Words Don't Have to Hurt: Taking the Ouch Out of Reading Poetry
Richard Harrison, Nancy Bell (M), Sandra Kasturi, Colleen Anderson
Ask anybody how much poetry they read. The answer is likely to be, "Poetry! I don't read poetry!" Ask them why they don't read poetry and the answer is: "Poetry is hard"; "Poetry is irrelevant"; "I don't understand poetry". How did we, as a population get to the place where we think poetry has to be difficult to understand, irrelevant, and so difficult that is too hard to bother with? This interactive panel will explore some of the ways we come to believe that all poetry is too difficult to bother with. It will attempt to dispel some of the common myths about poetry. It will introduce the audience to poetry with the hope of showing that poetry can be a part of the everyday world.

Saturday 2 PM - Brentwood

100 Years of Planetary Romance
Kevin J. Anderson, Rebecca Moesta, J.Y.T. Kennedy (M)
In 1912, Edgar Rice Burroughs made popular the burgeoning sub-genre "Planetary Romance" with "A Princess of Mars" where Earthman John Carter goes to Mars to rescue Martian Princess Dejah Thoris. Popular works such as Frank Herbert's Dune and George Lucas' Star Wars followed. More recently we have had James Cameron's Avatar and the film reinvention of Burroughs' work "John Carter". How has "Planetary Romance" adapted through the past 100 years to our cultural and scientific advancements?

Saturday 4 PM - Foothills 2

The Aurora: What's Really Happening
Dr. David Knudsen
Outside of the scientific literature, the aurora is almost universally described as the result of charged particles in the solar wind being captured by earth’s magnetic field and directed toward the magnetic poles. This description is hopelessly out of date. For example, it’s now known that the electrons that bombard our upper atmosphere and cause the aurora are a thousand times more energetic than electrons in the solar wind, pointing to a naturally-occurring particle accelerator close to earth. What's more, auroral electrons don't necessarily even originate in the solar wind. This talk will bring you up to date on your understanding of the aurora, and demonstrate that the real explanation of the aurora - and the remaining mysteries - are much more exciting than you thought.

Fatal Pharmacology

_Dwayne Clayden_

Drugs have been the murder weapon of choice for assassins throughout time. It wasn’t until the late 1700’s and into the 1800’s that ways of detecting the poison became known. Since then the cat and mouse game of developing/discovering new drugs/poisons has been challenged by those finding ways to detect the poison. Is there such a thing as an undetectable poison? Can the patient’s own medications be used? We will discuss these and other ‘murder’ possibilities in this session.

How Science Fiction has Influenced Science and Technology
Jason Donev
Which came first, the chicken or the egg? In the world of Science Fiction and technology which came first, the communicator or the cell phone? How does Sci-Fi colour the perception of technology, and where do we go from here? Professor of Physics, Jason Donev, from the U of C will attempt to shed some light on the matter.

Sunday 1 PM - Brentwood
Modern Folklore
Vanessa Cardui, Dave Duncan, J.Y.T. Kennedy (M), Derryl Murphy
As it evolves over time, folklore gives rise to re-interpretations which, from the point of view of scholars interested in history and authenticity, are mis-interpretations. Panellists look at the history of folklore, focusing on the tension between the appeal of what is authentically original and the aspirations of later versions.

Sunday 1 PM - Charleswood
Fighting Fear and Rejection
Susan Calder, Aviva Bell, Adria Laycraft (M), Billie Milholland, Ann Marston
Some authors have a wall of rejections slips. Others don’t let their parents or their spouse read their work. No matter how well we write, we will have our critics. Panellists discuss the psychology of receiving criticism and what we can do to fight against it and win.

Music is Poetry?/Poetry is Music?
Vannesa Cardui, Dymphny Dronyk, Kris Demeanor, Vivian Hansen
Ask many people if they read, listen to, like poetry and they will say, "NO!". Ask those same people if they listen to, like music (song) and they will inevitably say, "YES!". Are they really "dissing" poetry when they listen to song? After all, the word Sonnet means "little song". Maybe they like poetry and don't realize it. This panel will cover, among other things, how the sonnet (and other forms of formal poetry) might be the bridge between poetry and song, the possibility that poetry is song, not all poetry is song, not all song is poetry (or at least good poetry) and more.

Sunday 2 PM - Collingwood (sign-up required)
